Here Is How They Celebrated Christmas Where Christmas Began

JERUSALEM, Dec. 26—Incessant sniping endangered the lives of Palestine residents today in the wake of a bloody Christmas during which 124 to 200 persons were killed or wounded.

The casualty toll resulting from Arab-Jewish strife over partition was the greatest in the history of Holy Land since British occupation forces took over in Palestine in 1917.

Although the official toll of casualties was placed at 124 in gun fights and in the aftermath of Palestine, reliable sources estimated that nearly 200 persons were on the lists of those who died or were wounded.

The most serious incident of Christmas Day was a battle in which Arabs were driven from a bridge in the Haifa area by British troops and commando forces of Haganah, military arm of the Jewish Agency.

The British maintained a strict patrol over the area following rumors that saboteurs intended to blow up the bridge.

A four-year-old Jewish girl was killed during the forenoon today by a sniper's bullet at Holon, outside Jaffa.

Thursday's casualties included a former American Army soldier, Carmi Rabinowitz, and a former Olympics games champion, Elo Katz, who won the 5,000 meter race in the 1928 games at Amsterdam, Holland, where he represented Finland.

Arab snipers concentrated in the area of Haifa in an apparent effort to halt traffic to and from Palestine's main port.

Holy Land observers declared that the non-stop assaults by the Arab snipers, despite the fact that Arab bands have suffered and are ably reinforced.

Latest official casualties included two British soldiers who were killed and three others who were wounded during the night in disturbances in the all-Jewish city of Tel Aviv.

Jewish sources said an attack was made on the soldiers, who were engaged in a Christmas celebration, when they refused to leave a waterfront cafe at closing time.

The major casualties occurred a battle described as a miniature Arab-Jewish war in Haifa.

The fight was on a larger scale than any which have occurred in the three weeks since the United Nations decided to partition the Holy Land.

The battle found opposing sides employing bombs, mortars, grenades, rifles and tommyguns.

When the battle grew to serious proportions, British troops and Jewish militiamen joined in the fray and routed Arab units which had sought to isolate the eastern part of Haifa from the bay settlements.

Western Powers 'Provoked' Pearl Harbor Attack, Tojo Tells War Crimes Tribunal

TOKYO, Dec. 26—Hideki Tojo, the man who "pressed the button" for the Pearl Harbor attack, took the witness stand and launched his own defense today with the charge that the Western powers "provoked" Japan into striking the first blow of the Pacific war.

History's longest trial, now closing its 19th month, reached its tensely-awaited climax as the diminutive author of Japan's disastrous bid for hemispheric supremacy mounted the stand to defend himself against war crimes charges.

The one-time warlord spoke only two clipped affirmations in his first appearance as a witness in the historic drama of which he is the central figure.

When his name was called, Tojo rose from his chair in the defendants' box, as bright arc-lights were turned on, and was escorted by two white-helmeted American military police officers to the witness stand.

He fumbled with his horn-rimmed spectacles and with the side-pocket flaps of his high-collared, olive-drab army uniform as he swore to tell the truth "according to my conscience."

HAVING TAKEN the oath, Japan's "Pearl Harbor premier" removed his glasses while he signed and affixed his seal to a sworn statement he had written in jail giving his version of the momentous events that kindled the Pacific phase of World War II.

Occasionally he scowled and blinked under the glare of the arc-lights, but the few words he spoke were uttered in a clear, firm voice.

Tojo, most important of the 25 defendants being tried for capital outrages against peace and humanity, went to the stand late in the afternoon following a brief opening statement by his attorney.

The lawyer, Dr. Ichiro

Kiyose, introduced a 246-page affidavit sworn to by Tojo. In it the bald-domed leader of Japan's adventure into World War II challenged the right of the Allied Far East tribunal to try him as the main instigator of the Pacific conflict.

Kiyose set forth seven principal points in Tojo's affidavit:

1.—Japan neither planned nor prepared for war against the United States, Great Britain and The Netherlands.

2.—These three powers forced Japan into delivering the first attack—the Pearl Harbor surprise onslaught—in what Tojo described as a "defensive" struggle.

3.—Tojo's government "scrupulously" tried to deliver war declarations to the Western powers before the Pearl Harbor sneak attack was unleashed.

4.—The true purport and significance of Japan's greater East Asia policy was "misunderstood abroad."

5.—The so-called "military clique" did not exist in Japan.

6.—The Japanese military supreme command was independent of the government's civil authority.

7.—The military administra-

Officer Promotions Under Fire

Panel Investigates Quick Rank Jumps

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26—House investigators today probed the "Mexican promotions" of several hundred Army reserve officers who retired with lifetime tax-exempt pensions after receiving last-minute boosts in rank.

The investigation is being made as part of an overall study of the Army-Navy-Air Force retirement systems which has been underway for the past six months by a house armed service subcommittee headed by Rep. Elston (R) Ohio.

A subcommittee source declared that many reserve officers were given what are known as "Mexican, fluff or flush" promotions boosting them one grade in rank just before they were retired to civil life.

The investigation also disclosed:

Greeks, Guerrillas In Savage Fighting

ATHENS, Dec. 26—Greek War Minister Gen. George Stratos left Athens today to take personal command of government troops seeking to dislodge heavy guerrilla forces in Northern Epirus.

Savage fighting was reported still under way in and near the towns of Konitea and Borazani where the rebels are attempting to gain territory as a seat for the so-called "free" government whose formation was announced Christmas Eve.

Latest word from the front said that government forces were counterattacking in an effort to disperse the guerrillas, whose initial onslaught was marked by heavy artillery fire from the hills.

Two thousand well-armed guerrillas participated in the Konitsa - Barazani attacks. Another rebel force of 1,500 men assaulted the town of Agrinion but was repelled.

ON HIS departure from Athens, Gen. Stratos was asked whether troops of the so-called "international brigade" said to have been formed in Yugoslavia and Albania were involved in the battles. He merely said:

"Information to that effect is not available."

Athens newspapers reported that a plane bearing Yugoslav colors flew over the battle lines but retreated to Albania when Green fliers took to the air.

Foreign Minister Constantine Tsaldaris instructed the Greek delegate to the United Nations to lodge a protest with the secretariat over Yugoslav's alleged action in granting radio facilities to Gen. Markos Vafthiades, the rebel leader.

The government also plans to send communications to the Soviet satellite nations of Yugoslavia, Albania and Bulgaria, warning them against repercussions that would follow granting

9 Fliers Down On Frozen Lake

WESTOVER FIELD, Mass., Dec. 26—An specially-equipped transport plane was ordered into the air today from a Labrador field to rescue nine U. S. airmen off a frozen lake in the wilderness where they have survived two nights of sub-zero cold.

Awaiting help on Lake Astray, 275 miles to the northwest of Goose Bay, were the seven airmen and two passengers who were aboard a C-17 transport which was forced down by engine trouble while on a "Flying Santa Claus" mission to remote outposts in Greenland.

Terse radio messages relayed to Westover from Goose Bay indicated the nine fliers have rigged their parachutes to form a shelter against the Arctic nights which reach 20 below zero. They are clustered around the bomber on a blanket of 29 inches of snow in hilly, scrub-covered country considered inaccessible by land.

Science To Get Siamese Twins

BEDFORD, Ind., Dec. 26—Mr. and Mrs. Edward Spear, parents of the Siamese twins who died yesterday in Indianapolis, said today that the bodies of the little boys will be given to the Indiana University Medical Center for scientific purposes.

The little-boys were born Nov. 29 in Bedford with their heads joined at the tops of their skulls. They were rushed to the medical center in Indianapolis, where a fight to save their lives ended Christmas Day when they died an hour and 15 minutes apart.

IT WAS A HAPPY CHRISTMAS for Tony Marino (right) whose life sentence was voided by the supreme court. He gets good wishes from Warden Ragen in Statesville, Ill., prison, where Marino spent 22 years on a murder charge. Marino was convicted at the age of 18, two years after he came to the U. S. from Italy. The high court said an "error" was made in the handling of Marino's case.

PRESSURE MOUNTING

New Grain Gambler List Readied By Ag Chief

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26—Agriculture Secretary Clinton Anderson pushed preparation of his second list of commodity traders today amidst mounting pressure for a separate "pay dirt" listing of government workers who have been playing the market.

The Agriculture department is nearly ready to issue the names of 1,200 traders in wheat on the Chicago exchange on April 30, 1946.

There may be some government workers on the list, installment No. 2 of a "master sheet" of between 14,000 and 20,000 names, but Commodity Exchange authority experts said they would not be so labeled.

Later—and bigger—lists will show traders in Chicago wheat on Feb. 28 and Sept. 17, 1947. It had been planned that these lists too, would contain only names and addresses, but there are growing indications that Anderson will yield to demands that occupations also be shown.

THE LISTS are being published at the direction of congress as a result of charges that commodity speculation—some of it by government "insiders"—is at least partially to blame for the inflationary rise in prices of foods.

The pressure for an immediate definite listing of government people was increased by reports that the agriculture secretary has the names of 71 state, local and federal employees who were in the wheat market on Sept. 17.

Another factor is the charge by Harold Stassen, GOP presidential aspirant, that the Truman administration is issuing a "shower of irrelevant statistics" for the "obvious purpose of confusing and distracting" the public.

Anderson's first list, naming 711 "big time" commodity traders, contained only one government employee—Edwin W. Pauley, special assistant to the secretary of the Army, whose market activities were already widely known as a result of congressional hearings.

11 Are Killed In Texas Fires

ORANGE, Tex., Dec. 26—Seven men and four women are dead in Texas today as the result of fires which swept a hotel at Orange and a dance hall at Fredericksburg.

The hotel fire occurred Christmas night. The victims were six men and a woman who were not immediately identified.

O. A. Sikes, proprietor of the hotel, said the victims apparently were suffocated. Cause of the blaze was not determined.

Several of the other 12 registrants in the hotel escaped by jumping from second floor windows.

The dance hall victims lost their lives when they were trapped behind a 50-foot concession counter when the blaze enveloped the hall, constructed of sheet iron and lumber.

Fires Hit Cities; Ships In Distress

Emergency Holiday Called By Roxas

NEW YORK, Dec. 26—NBC's Manila correspondent radioed today that 65 deaths and injuries have resulted from the typhoon that is sweeping the Philippines.

The correspondent said that many of the dead and injured were struck by sheets of tin roofing that sailed through the air.

The city of Tacloban on Leyte gulf was in flames as the result of the violent storm which also put two foreign ships in distress in Philippine water.

The typhoon, dubbed "Jean," was swirling out to the China sea. President Manuel Roxas declared an emergency holiday for government workers and ordered all police forces to give utmost aid to storm sufferers.

In Manila a 15-year-old boy and a 23-year-old youth were electrocuted by contact with power wires downed by the winds which at one time reached a velocity of 90 miles an hour. A 65-year-old woman was crushed to death by a falling tree.

In the Visayan region south of Manila, the Norwegian ship Tigre and the Danish motor vessel Kina were reported in distress, while three men were said to be adrift in a small motorboat in the Sulu sea.

Two commercial planes parked at Manila's Makati airfield were demolished when the wind lifted them off the ground and smashed them together. The wreckage of one of the planes caught fire.

Damage to homes and business buildings in Manila alone was estimated in the millions of pesos.

Headway Made In Isolating One Cold Virus

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26—Two doctors have succeeded in isolating at least one type of cold virus but they hold only slight hope that immunity to the common cold can be developed.

The men are Doctors Norman Topping and Leon Atlas, representing the National Institute of Health, who have been experimenting on volunteer human guinea pigs at the Lorton, Va., reformatory.

The virus they cultivated in embryonic eggs was said to have caused death in an unusual number of embryos and readily infected the volunteers upon inoculation.

Drs. Topping and Atlas believe the tests have proven that colds are transmitted from person to person instead of being induced by other factors.

The virus they isolated resembled that of influenza but Dr. Topping said the two were "easily distinguishable."

Persons inoculated with the virus suffered fatigue, sneezing, headaches, coughing and burning eyes and some developed more severe symptoms such as chills, hot flashes, laryngitis, fever and sharp pains.

Dr. Topping said the experiments will be renewed early next year with emphasis on the study of possible basic immunity accompanying colds but he expressed doubt that any such immunity if ever developed, will be of significant duration.

Kiernan's ONE MAN'S OPINION

This was a good Christmas for many. One man I know gave his wife an electric blanket. Next year he's giving her electricity.

Another fellow delayed so long, when he got in the store the clerk said "there's nothing left but the bare shelves." He said "I'll take one; the old lady needs an ironing board."

The President received a small dog, a small dog house and the news that Washington reporters don't believe he can be reelected.

I hear Stalin cabled: "Now do you see the advantage of the one-party system?"

Stalin got 100 percent of the vote in his district and beat nobody with his customary ease.

But looking forward to the new year, the old one was rather successful. The Communists won in the Soviet and lost about everywhere else.

The Star of Bethlehem still attracts more people than the Red star.

Wild Gunfight Mars California Christmas

KING CITY, Cal., Dec. 26—Two escaped convicts lay wounded in a King City hospital today following their capture in a gun battle that ended a wild automobile flight of more than 300 miles, during which the desperadoes kidnapped a woman.

A police officer also was wounded in the Christmas Day gunfight at San Ardo, 15 miles south of King City, Salinas river town in the Central California county of Monterey.

In critical condition at King

City's Community hospital was Hershel Graham while his partner, in the 24-hour bid for freedom, Eugene Earp, was less seriously hurt. Police Officer Aaron T. Flowers was in the same hospital with two bullet wounds in the leg.

The drama opened Wednesday afternoon when Graham and Earp, both 26, fled from the Chino prison road camp at Escondido, near San Diego, taking with them two guns and several rounds of ammunition.

THREE HOURS later, the convicts stopped Charles Garrison, a rancher, at Fallbrook, 15 miles north of the camp. After slugging and tying up their victim, they made off with Garrison's car and $90 from his wallet.

At Rincon Junction, five miles farther up the highway, they held up W. B. Mertz of Brawley, Calif., and his wife, Olive. They forced the Mertzes into the back of the car and drove off in the second stolen auto. An hour later the gunmen threw Mertz out of the car.

At Santa Barbara, Mrs. Mertz jumped out as the car

LaFollette Seen Aid Plan Boss

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26—Former Senator Robert M. LaFollette, of Wisconsin, appears today to be the administration's first choice to administer the four-year $17 billion Marshall Plan for aid to Europe.

A reliable source says President Truman favors the appointment of LaFollette, a Progressive Republican who is extremely popular on Capitol Hill, in order to take administration of the program out of domestic politics.

"THIS TIME FOR KEEPS" "GREEN DOLPHIN STREET"

TRAGIC TO DISGUSTING

Year 1947--A Year Of Strange Happenings

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26—Days like today, if a man sits overlong in front of the fire, brooding, he's apt to find himself wishing that history could be edited like the pages of The Congressional Record.

That voluminous so-called record, you recall, permits all members of congress to second-guess themselves on what they said and did before the pages finally go to the printer for the last time.

Also, the two legislative bodies have the power to strike from the record almost anything they wish, except the actual voting tallies.

Somewhat, looking back over mankind's antics during the year now about to end, you get the feeling that humanity would like to strike a great deal of the developments of 1947 from the history book.

Perhaps it's just that, in the cold dawn of these days in between the year-end holidays, the stimulus of the pre-Christmas atmosphere suddenly has seeped from your bones, leaving you reviewing the old year in a soberly analytical mood.

WHATEVER the cause, the sight you see is not particularly cheering in retrospect.

Chief among the developments that sadden the observer has been the gradual decline in world hopes for peace. In that respect, 1946 brought some disillusionment. The end of last year saw the hope of peace still blooming. The end of this year finds it sadly wilted—with only the prayer that the Marshall Plan may revive it in time.

Details of its demise are too well known to need more than listing by headline titles. . . military conflicts in China, Korea, Palestine and elsewhere. . . political conflicts, often culminating in violence, in Italy, France, Germany, and Philippines and countless other places. . . the constant bickering in the United Nations. . . the veto. . . failure of the London parley—you could go on and on, indefinitely.

Particularly galling to war veterans has been 1947's demonstration of how lightly a hard-won peace is valued by a grasping world. But little is galling have been some of the perfidies and broken promises they've encountered at home during the year.

Housing? They tended to forgive the failure of 1946 to get started towards solving the terrific shortage, for after all, that was the first year of reconversion. But 1947 found the situation deteriorating, rather than improving in most areas—and with legislators, lobbyists, industry, business, finance and labor openly playing politics and greed, there no longer was any acceptable excuse for the broken housing promise.

INFLATION? Most veterans and non-veterans were better off in 1946 than during this year, despite the promises a year ago last Fall. For one thing, many of them still had some savings, and prices were lower last year than now. Today, the savings are about gone and prices still climbing. And politics made mockery of the inflation issue during the recent special session.

Men grew suddenly older, more fatalistic, more cynical in 1947—and it showed in their individual conduct, too.

There was more crime, more drunkenness, more divorce, more exhibitions of petty prejudices and intolerances. And often they passed beyond the petty stage and became vicious, malignant things.

Even the elements seemed to join hands with human carelessness, drunkenness and fleeing fears, for the accident rate became a new scandal during the year. Much of this, in automobiles, could be laid to humans' doors, but there were some train and many airplane crashes which still so utterly unexplained as to border on the uncanny.

Those are the things that 1947 either brought or made worse, not to mention—shifting from the tragic to the disgusting—the "new look".

All things considered, most people would just about as soon strike the year from the record. Paraphrasing the song:

"I don't want it, you can have it. . . It's too bad for me!"

Goodnight Kiss Costs Man $30

CHICAGO, Dec. 26—Earl Hullison, 28, Northwestern university student, told police today it cost him $30 to give his fiancée a goodnight Christmas kiss.

Hullison left his car unlocked when he accompanied Miss Mary Spaulding, 27, to her door, kissed her goodnight and then climbed back into his car and drove off.

Two blocks away, he told police, a gunman arose from the rear seat and robbed him of $30.

112 Accidents Net 1 Fatality

CINCINNATI, Dec. 26—Cincinnati may have established some sort of a double-barrelled accident record over Christmas as ice coated streets and highways.

Police reported a total of 112 accidents between 7 a. m. Wednesday and 6 a. m., this morning—but there was only one fatality. Robert Mullins, 25, was killed when his auto skidded into a utility pole.

Coast Guard Seeks Drifter

CHICAGO, Dec. 26—Coast Guard planes planned to join surface craft today in the search for a 20-year-old Guardsman adrift more than a day on Lake Michigan in a 28-foot motor launch.

Three Coast Guard boats were unable to find a trace of the missing crewman in an all-day search of the southern end of the lake yesterday.

The man, whose identity was not revealed, left Indiana Harbor, Ind., about 12:30 a. m. yesterday for a return trip to the Calumet Harbor lifeboat station. He had towed a small craft to Indiana Harbor for repairs and under normal conditions should have returned to Calumet Harbor in an hour, according to Coast Guard officers.

TRAGIC TO DISGUSTING

Year 1947--A Year
Of Strange Happenings

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26—Days like today, if a man sits overlong in front of the fire, brooding, he's apt to find himself wishing that history could be edited like the pages of The Congressional Record.

That voluminous so-called record, you recall, permits all members of congress to second-guess themselves on what they said and did before the pages finally go to the printer for the last time.

Also, the two legislative bodies have the power to strike from the record almost anything they wish, except the actual voting tallies.

Somehow, looking back over mankind's antics during the year now about to end, you get the feeling that humanity would like to strike a great deal of the developments of 1947 from the history book.

Perhaps it's just that, in the cold dawn of these days in between the year-end holidays, the stimulus of the pre-Christmas atmosphere suddenly has seeped from your bones, leaving you reviewing the old year in a soberly analytical mood.

WHATEVER the cause, the sight you see is not particularly cheering in retrospect.

Chief among the developments that sadden the observer has been the gradual decline in world hopes for peace. In that respect, 1946 brought some disillusionment. The end of last year saw the hope of peace still blooming. The end of this year finds it sadly wilted—with only the prayer that the Marshall Plan may revive it in time.

Details of its demise are too well known to need more than listing by headline titles. Military conflicts in China, Korea, Palestine and elsewhere, political conflicts, often culminating in violence, in Italy, France, Germany, and Philippines and countless other places, the constant bickering in the United Nations, the veto, failure of the London parley—you could go on and on, indefinitely.

Particularly galling to war veterans has been 1947's demonstration of how lightly a hard-won peace is valued by a grasping world. But little galling have been some of the perfidies and broken promises they've encountered at home during the year.

Housing? They tended to forgive the failure of 1946 to get started towards solving the terrific shortage, for after all, that was the first year of reconversion. But 1947 found the situation deteriorating, rather than improving in most areas—and with legislators, lobbyists, industry, business, finance and labor openly playing politics and greed, there no longer was any acceptable excuse for the broken housing promise.

INFLATION? Most veterans and non-veterans were better off in 1946 than during this year, despite the promises a year ago last Fall. For one thing, many of them still had some savings, and prices were lower last year than now. Today, the savings are about gone and prices still climbing. SCHOLAR AND JINGLE

"TWAS THE Night before Christmas", a poem dear to every child, first appeared in a Troy, N. Y., newspaper in 1822. The author, Clement C. Moore, attained fame because of this verse which he wrote for the amusement of his own children with no thought of publishing it. A guest in the house during the first reading was responsible, so the story goes, for giving the verse to the newspaper the next year, and thus to children for more than a century.

Mr. Moore would be surprised to find his name living through this rhyme that he could not have taken very seriously. He was the son of an Episcopal bishop who was at one time president of Columbia University, and he was brought up in a home in Wall street and knew the days when New York was in British hands. His father was a loyalist, though apparently respected by the colonials as he was eventually rector of Trinity Church not far from the Moore home. His son, Clement, an only child, was destined for orders, but chose to be a Biblical scholar instead. His specialty was Hebrew. He gave land in Greenwich Village, inherited from his mother, for a theological seminary, and later taught in it.

It is odd to think of so solemn a scholar penning a popular children's verse such as "Twas the Night before Christmas". But it is no more strange than to find the English mathematician Lewis Carroll writing Alice in Wonderland or the great French lawyer and historical writer, Laboulaye, writing the finest fairy tales ever read by children. It may be true that

"A little nonsense, now and then

Is relished by the best of men."

Perhaps the finest work Nathaniel Hawthorne ever did was his translation of Greek myths into stories for children, the Tanglewood Tales and The Wonder Book.

YOUTH WELCOMES DP'S

WHATEVER modern education does for young people or omits to do, it does make them articulate, and encourages them to think for themselves. They sometimes put their elders to shame by their clear-eyed view of much-discussed subjects.

Several hundred junior high school students taking part in a Youth Forum sponsored by the New York Times recently proved this fact. Their topic was "Shall We Open Our Doors to Displaced Persons?" A minority opposed the DP's, but a good majority, after a lively discussion, approved of the project. The youngsters showed an intelligent grasp of the situation, covering all the angles and showing no sign of jumping to a conclusion, or being emotionally involved.

It is a good omen for the future that, speaking in general, the young people are more likely to be tolerant and generous in their reaction to such a problem than are their elders. In the course of time their enthusiasm may be tempered by experience; but not, it is hoped, to the extent that they lose their attitude of viewing the world as a whole.

Once Gay British Envoy | Fraud Case Against Meyers
Inverchapel Now Reticent | Weakened by Complications

Special to Central Press

WASHINGTON—Lord Inverchapel, the British ambassador, is establishing himself as one of the most reticent members of the diplomatic corps, in sharp contrast with his predecessor, Lord Halifax.

Halifax, regarded as austere before being named to the Washington post, became an outstanding mixer with all elements of American life during his tenure. His ambition was to eat at a hot dog stand.

Contrarily, Inverchapel had the name of a "Hail fellow well met" while ambassador to Moscow, but he dried up when he came to Washington.

Intimates attribute it to Inverchapel's naturally retiring nature. They say he likes to meet a few people intimately, but dislikes chance encounters. He has adopted one amazing technique which labels him as a "prima donna" with some State department personnel.

When the ambassador calls at the department he studiously avoids going to the diplomatic reception room. Instead, he is driven in his Rolls Royce to the private garage under the building and takes the private, automatic elevator to Secretary George C. Marshall's office.

No one knows how he discovered the elevator, and there is no operator to tell Inverchapel it is on Marshall's private use. In consequence, he sometimes breaks in on top officials entirely unannounced.

These Days

The shock of great events has been absorbed by the spirit of Man. Again Man has returned to his own hearth, to the simplicities of living, to little kindnesses, to small gossip, to the ways of his environment, one man in the circle of his intimates.

Caesar was great and the power of Rome world-shaking. But Jesus was born in a small province of a small country—a dependent country. He was born in the least building, a stable—actually He was born in a manger. He came out of a tiny people, the Jews, and His associates, as He set forth to preach, were the little people, fishermen and laborers.

There were emperors and kings, consuls and high priests, but Jesus was not of the mighty nor were His followers. And yet, no greater influence has ever been exerted upon the human mind. As Lecomte du Nouy says in "Human Destiny."

"The wakes of Moses, of Buddha, of Confucius, of Lao Tse, of Christ, probably exert a greater influence over humanity today than when these men were pondering over its fate and happiness. No man ever disappears completely if he strives to do good and expects no reward outside of the joy of having contributed to the progress of mankind."

Whether one be a Christian or not, this must be accepted: In the gospels, in the life of Christ, even more, in the thought of Jesus, the evolution of man is directed toward an attainable but not yet attained goodness. For thousands of years, prior to the advent of Christ, sage and prophet in many countries had sought to find a basic difference between Man and all else in nature.

What is Man? they asked. And that is still being asked. But it cannot be answered merely by saying that Man is an improved amoeba nor even that, having learned to speak, he has written books on philosophy and astrophysics. We know that Man is more than that, for somehow this creature has achieved such wonders. He has lessened time and space; he has gained control of his environment; he has taken iron from the soil and made of it things to serve him; he has improved the fruits of field and orchard; he has written laws to make life more livable. Is that all?

But Jesus said:

"These things I command you, that ye love one another."

And more he said:

"Ye have heard that it hath been said, Caesar was great and the power of Rome thine enemy. But I say unto you, 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you.'"

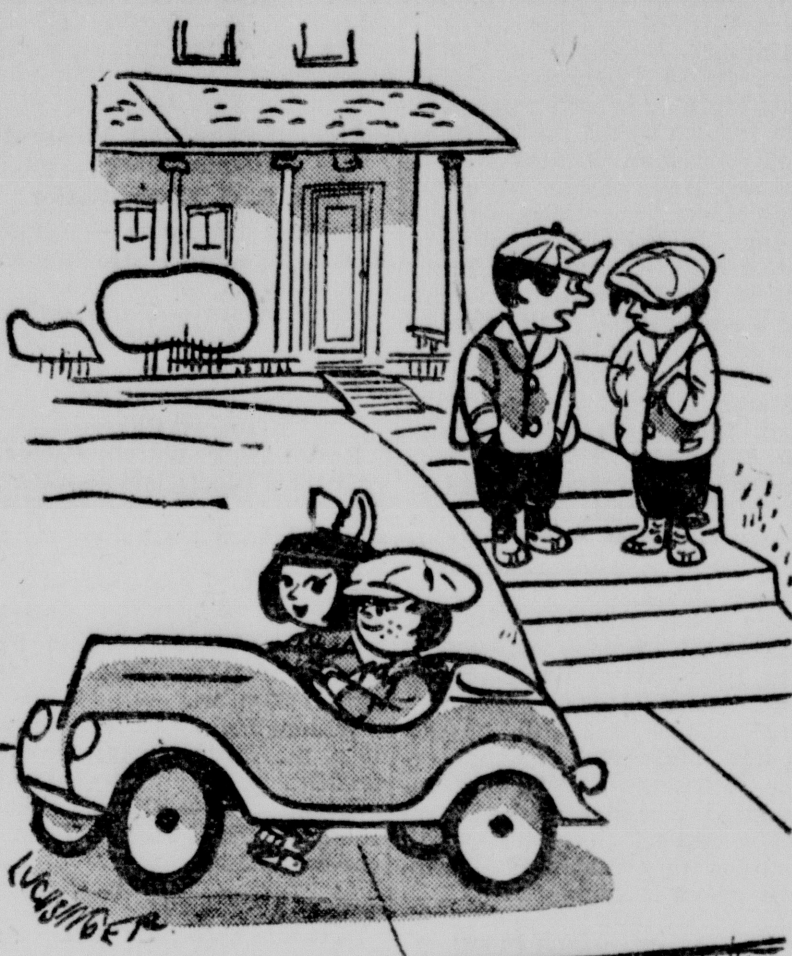

Nearly 20 centuries have passed since He cried to the world, "Love your enemies," and Man has not yet listened. For if we love our enemies, there are no enemies. If we can forgive those who abuse us and do us injustice, if we know for sure that the rain falls equally upon the good and the wicked, upon the just and the unjust, upon the white, the black, the yellow, upon all the children of God, for they are all His children, then the world must be filled with everlasting goodness and peace.

Two Types of Scalp Ringworm

By HERMAN N. BUNDESEN, M.D.

IF there is anything against which mothers should be on guard these days it is ringworm of the scalp. Of late years this disorder has been very prevalent and in some cities there have been—and still are—widespread epidemics among school children.

Ringworm of the scalp is a disorder almost entirely confined to children. In practically all cases, it clears up when the child matures, but to leave it to do so of itself usually means running the risk of permanent baldness.

Types of Ringworm There are two types of ringworm which may infect the scalp, one called the animal type and the other known as the human type.

Infections produced by the animal type are much milder than those caused by the human type. As a general rule, there are a few oval, scaly patches of inflammation on the scalp. The hairs in these areas are loosened and fall out. In some cases, a deep abscess may form. This condition appears to be less catching than the infection caused by the human type. It is believed that the infection may be caught from dogs and cats.

No Inflammation Ringworm of the scalp, caused by the human type of fungus, does not produce inflammation. Oval, scaly patches develop which are covered with a stubble of broken hairs. The hairs break off near the surface and do not tend to fall out as easily as when the infection is caused by the animal type.

This condition is transmitted much more easily from one child to another by direct contact during play or the exchange of caps, and by the use of infected combs and brushes. It is also thought that the infection may be transmitted by contact with the backs of seats in theatres.

Infection Spreads

This infection tends to spread rapidly over the scalp. Because there is no inflammation, pain, or itching, the infection may be present for some time before the child is aware of it.

Ringworm of the scalp is from six to nine times as common in boys as in girls. This is thought to be due to the more frequent exchange of caps among boys, closer contact during play, and shorter hair.

Infection starts most often on the back of the head. As a general rule, diagnosis of ringworm of the scalp is not difficult to make.

Ultra-Violet Light

The use of a special type of ultra-violet light in examining the scalp is extremely helpful. When the ultra-violet light falls on hairs affected by the ringworm infection, the hairs fluoresce. This examination with the ultra-violet light is carried out in a dark room. Of course, the hairs may also be examined under a microscope to determine whether or not the ringworm fungus is present.

In treating the infection, it is necessary to remove the hairs from the area of the scalp affected. This may be done by pulling the hairs out. X-ray treatments are advised in some cases. Various preparations may also be employed to destroy the fungus.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

A. W. R.: Will excessive smoking and the drinking of coffee cause the heart to skip beats?

Answer: Irregular heart-beat may be produced in some cases by the things you mention. Skipping of the heart-beat may be a dangerous disorder since it may be due to some serious damage to the heart.

CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO

BILL ignored his aunt, his eyes still on Cathy, and said gently:

"Poor darling, it's been an ordeal, hasn't it? But it's all over now. You run along and get a good night's rest, and tomorrow we'll take the world into our confidence, and then we'll go away for a nice long honeymoon. Not a trial honeymoon this time, but one surrounded by all the fanfare and publicity you want."

Cathy made a little helpless gesture.

"You just can't believe that a woman could fall out of love with you, can you, Bill?"

Bill flushed with anger at that.

"It's a little hard to understand just how you could change so much, Cathy—overnight," he told her curly.

Cathy's eyebrows drew together in a frown and she said quite honestly, "That surprises me, too, Bill. I think—well, I think I was just so in the habit of loving you and thinking that all I ever wanted was to be married to you. And I think that while I was away—I—well, we both changed."

"I think it's because you are angry with me, and you are kidding yourself, that you're letting your pride blind you to the truth," said Bill. "I've groveled—if not sufficiently, then I'll grovel some more. I still think I was right to try to guarantee your future, but if you're willing to take a chance on it, we'll walk out of here this minute and try it on our own."

Neither of them had heard the sound of a car in the drive, and now Elaine was in the doorway saying swiftly, "They need you at the hospital, Cathy, if you feel up to it."

She looked from one to the other of the three in the room, standing stiff and white and tense.

"Sorry, I seem to be intruding at a very crucial moment—but after all, you said if they needed you—"

"Of course—I'll be ready in a minute," said Cathy, and ignoring Bill's protest, turned from the room and went running up the stairs.

Elaine followed her, and as Cathy went into the room assigned to her, the other girl said casually, "I brought you a uniform from the hospital, knowing your slacks would hardly be proper garb."

Cathy thanked her and said out of the white chiffon frock.

"Cathy, are you in love with Mark?" Elaine asked abruptly.

"Certainly not," Cathy almost snapped, having grown extremely weary of this question in the last hectic hours.

"Sure?"

"Of course I'm sure!"

"Then, Cathy, will you promise me something?"

"Of course."

"Then—don't tell Mark any of the fool things I said at the tea shop. Gosh, was it only yesterday afternoon? I don't believe it. It must have been a million years ago," Elaine marveled. "Wasn't it the double gosh-darned fool, shooting off my pretty little mouth about I didn't believe in love and all that truck? I didn't even have sense enough to know that love is like lightning and that you don't have to believe in it. If it wants to strike you, it does, and the heck with your silly little 'beliefs.'"

Cathy, buttoning herself into the crisply starched uniform, looked questioningly at Elaine.

"Are you trying to tell me that you are in love with Mark?" she demanded.

Elaine's grin was as bashful, like a child.

"I'm trying my damndest not to tell him—to give him a chance to tell me. Only, Cathy, I'm scared to death he won't. After all, why should he? He's such a perfectly swell person and I'm—well, I'm strictly goon-bait. How could I expect anybody like Mark to care two pins for a dumb little drip like me?"

She drew a long, hard breath, lifted her pretty chin and said breathlessly, "Only if he doesn't, Cathy, I'm all washed up. I'm—I'm so crazy about him, I can just barely endure it."

Cathy said quietly, "This happened so suddenly, Elaine. Maybe it isn't real."

"That happened very suddenly in Circleville, too, Cathy," Elaine stated. "Can you doubt that was real?"

"No, of course not, only I always felt that love was something that required a lot of—well, cultivation—in order to grow strong and real."

"Like you and Bill?" Elaine asked quietly. "Well, the danger about that is that sometimes it stops growing and sort of fades, doesn't you think? Like—well, like a rose that grows and blooms and reaches its peak of beauty, only if you don't gather it, the first thing you know, it's full-blown and then shattered. That sometimes happens, too, Cathy—or did you know?"

Cathy stood quite still, her head up, her eyes closed. And then she nodded and said faintly, "Yes, Elaine. I guess I knew that, too."

Elaine said after a moment, "Bill's a good egg, Cathy. I hope you're not going to overlook that little point."

Cathy's mouth tightened as she bent to thrust her stockinged feet into the low-heeled white nurse's slippers that completed her uniform.

"A very good egg, and I'm not going to overlook the point," she said grimly, and stood up. "Shall we get started?"

At the door, Elaine put a swift hand on Cathy's arm and held her back for a moment, her eyes anxious and pleading.

"Cathy, you aren't going to tell Mark about what crazy things I said?"

"I'm not going to tell Mark anything at all, Elaine. Mark's quite able to handle his own affairs without help from me. Furthermore, I think it's very foolish for any innocent bystander to try to interfere in anybody's affairs of the heart."

"You despise me, don't you?" said Elaine huskily.

The hospital was filled to more than capacity. There was no longer such a thing as a private room, for beds had been moved into each of them and now three and sometimes four patients occupied every room. The more seriously injured were in these rooms; those in less serious condition filled the wards and the corridors to overflowing, and doctors and nurses, internes and nurse's aides worked tirelessly.

It was not far from dawn when Cathy was able, with two other nurses from her floor, to take a few minutes to go down to the dining room for coffee. The tables were well filled, mostly with hospital personnel, but here and there were white-faced family groups, tense with waiting for news of the condition of some loved one.

ONLY ONE READING

THERE are no two ways to read the situation when your partner wins your opening lead against a suit contract, lays down the ace of another suit and then switches back to your original suit or else the third side suit. He obviously had the singleton ace of the second suit and wants you to return it to him if you get the lead, so he can trump it. The sequence of events stated is of such frequent occurrence, and the only logical reason for it is so clear-cut, that it may almost be considered a definite convention of play. Failure to catch the idea is almost unpardonable.

the club 9 and so got the rest of the tricks.

At all other tables, after West ruffed the third spade, he returned a club, as called for by East's play of the singleton A. That resulted in setting the contract two tricks when East trumped it.

The defensive players in this contest were not overly strong, or else someone should have set the contract three tricks. West should have trumped his partner's spade A on the third trick, led a second round club for East to ruff, ruffed the third round spade and then led a third round club for another ruff from East. This play was bound to gain a trick if East had two trumps, and could not lose even if he had just one.

SCHOLAR AND JINGLE

"TWAS THE Night before Christmas", a poem dear to every child, first appeared in a Troy, N. Y., newspaper in 1822. The author, Clement C. Moore, attained fame because of this verse which he wrote for the amusement of his own children with no thought of publishing it. A guest in the house during the first reading was responsible, so the story goes, for giving the verse to the newspaper the next year, and thus to children for more than a century.

Mr. Moore would be surprised to find his name living through this rhyme that he could not have taken very seriously. He was the son of an Episcopal bishop who was at one time president of Columbia University, and he was brought up in a home in Wall street and knew the days when New York was in British hands. His father was a loyalist, though apparently respected by the colonials as he was eventually rector of Trinity Church not far from the Moore home. His son, Clement, an only child, was destined for orders, but chose to be a Biblical scholar instead. His specialty was Hebrew. He gave land in Greenwich Village, inherited from his mother, for a theological seminary, and later taught in it.

It is odd to think of so solemn a scholar penning a popular children's verse such as "Twas the Night before Christmas". But it is no more strange than to find the English mathematician Lewis Carroll writing Alice in Wonderland or the great French lawyer and historical writer, Laboulaye, writing the finest fairy tales ever read by children. It may be true that

Is relished by the best of men."
Perhaps the finest work Nathaniel Hawthorne ever did was his translation of Greek myths into stories for children, the Tanglewood Tales and The Wonder Book.

YOUTH WELCOMES DP'S

WHATEVER modern education does for young people or omits to do, it does make them articulate, and encourages them to think for themselves. They sometimes put their elders to shame by their clear-eyed view of much-discussed subjects.

Several hundred junior high school students taking part in a Youth Forum sponsored by the New York Times recently proved this fact. Their topic was "Shall We Open Our Doors to Displaced Persons?" A minority opposed the DP's, but a good majority, after a lively discussion, approved of the project. The youngsters showed an intelligent grasp of the situation, covering all the angles and showing no sign of jumping to a conclusion, or being emotionally involved.

It is a good omen for the future that, speaking in general, the young people are more likely to be tolerant and generous in their reaction to such a problem than are their elders. In the course of time their enthusiasm may be tempered by experience; but not, it is hoped, to the extent that they lose their attitude of viewing the world as a whole.

I still think I was right to try to guarantee your future, but if you're willing to take a chance on it, we'll walk out of here this minute and try it on our own."

Neither of them had heard the sound of a car in the drive, and now Elaine was in the doorway saying softly, "They need you at the hospital, Cathy, if you feel up to it."

She looked from one to the other of the three in the room, standing stiff and white and tense. "Sorry, I seem to be intruding at a very crucial moment—but after all, you said if they needed you—"

"Of course—I'll be ready in a minute," said Cathy and, ignoring Bill's protest, turned from the room and went running up the stairs.

Elaine followed her, and as Cathy went into the room assigned to her, the other girl said casually, "I brought you a uniform from the hospital, knowing your slacks would hardly be proper garb."

Cathy thanked her and said out of the white chiffon frock. "Cathy, are you in love with Mark?" Elaine asked abruptly.

"Certainly not," Cathy almost snapped, having grown extremely weary of this question in the last hectic hours.

"Sure?"

"Of course I'm sure!"

"Then, Cathy, will you promise me something?"

"Of course."

"Then—don't tell Mark any of the fool things I said at the tea shop. Goah, was it only yesterday afternoon? I don't believe it. It must have been a million years ago," Elaine marveled. "Wasn't I the double gosh-darned fool, shooting off my pretty little mouth about I didn't believe in love and all that truck? I didn't even have sense enough to know that love is like lightning and that you don't have to believe in it. If it wants to strike you, it does, and the heck with your silly little beliefs."

Cathy, buttoning herself into the crisply starched uniform, looked questioningly at Elaine.

"Are you trying to tell me that you are in love with Mark?" she demanded.

Elaine's grin was abashed, like a child.

"I'm trying my damndest not to tell him—to give him a chance to tell me. Only, Cathy, I'm scared to death he won't! After all, why should he? He's such a perfectly swell person and I'm—well, I'm strictly goon-bait. How could I expect anybody like Mark to care like me?"

She drew a long, hard breath, lifted her pretty chin and said breathlessly, "Only if he doesn't, Cathy, I'm all washed up. I'm—I'm so crazy about him, I can just barely endure it."

Cathy said quietly, "This happened so suddenly, Elaine. Maybe it isn't real."

"That happened very suddenly in Cypressville, too, Cathy," Elaine stated. "Can you doubt that was real?"

"No, of course not, only I always felt that love was something that required a lot of—well, cultivation—in order to grow strong and real."

"Like you and Bill?" Elaine asked quietly. "Well, the danger about that is that sometimes it stops growing and sort of fades, don't you think? Like—well, like a rose that grows and blooms and reaches its peak of beauty, only if you don't gather it, the first thing you know, it's full-blown and then shatters. That sometimes happens, too, Cathy—or did you know?"

Cathy stood quite still, her head up, her eyes closed. And then she nodded and said faintly, "Yes, Elaine. I guess I knew that, too."

Elaine said after a moment, "Bill's a good egg, Cathy. I hope you're not going to overlook that little point."

Cathy's mouth tightened as she bent to thrust her stockinged feet into the low-heeled white nurse's slippers that completed her uniform.

"A very good egg, and I'm not going to overlook the point," she said grimly, and stood up. "Shall we get started?"

At the door, Elaine put a swift hand on Cathy's arm and held her back for a moment, her eyes anxious and pleading.

"Cathy, you aren't going to tell Mark about what crazy things I said?"

"I'm not going to tell Mark anything at all, Elaine. Mark's quite able to handle his own affairs without help from me. Furthermore, I think it's very foolish for any innocent bystander to try to interfere in anybody's affairs of the heart."

"You despise me, don't you?" said Elaine huskily.

"Don't be a nitwit. I don't despise anybody—unless it's Cathy Layne," answered Cathy, and went out of the room and down the stairs.

Bill was waiting at the foot of the stairs, his hat in his hand, and when Elaine and Cathy looked at him, Bill said defensively, "After all, I do have a slight interest in what's happened at Cypressville. It's just barely possible I might be able to offer some slight assistance, so naturally I'm going, too."

The two girls led the way out of the house, and Bill slipped beneath the steering wheel of the station wagon as they got into the seat beside him.

They drove in silence into town. At the hospital, as Cathy got out of the car, Bill whispered, "Remember, Cathy, nothing is settled."

"I'm afraid it is, Bill."

"Nothing of the kind—but we'll postpone more discussion until a better time," he watched as Cathy went swiftly up the steps, through crowds of anxious relatives, who gave way almost humbly against the eloquent if silent authority of her crisp uniform.

Bill and Elaine, watching her, saw her shoulders go back and her head go up as she walked through the hospital door. And each of them sensed that the moment she stepped into the hospital, she ceased to be just Cathy Layne, the girl Bill loved, and became instead a nurse on duty, forgetting everything save the job ahead, her heart and her mind and her hands too busy with her task to have time or thought for her own personal problems.

Vaguely Cathy heard the sound of the car driving away; and then she was presenting herself to the harassed girl at the reception desk, and a moment later to a haggard, red-eyed doctor who almost wept at her announcement that she was ready for duty. The hospital had been understaffed to begin with, and the disaster had overloaded its facilities to the breaking point. Doctors and nurses had been on duty for more than twenty-four arduous hours, and the sight of a skilled, competent nurse, fresh and eager for any duty that awaited her, was heartening to all of them.

The hospital was filled to more than capacity. There was no longer such a thing as a private room, for beds had been moved into each of them and now three and sometimes four patients occupied every room. The more seriously injured were in these rooms; those in less serious condition filled the wards and the corridors to overflowing, and doctors and nurses, internes and nurse's aides worked tirelessly. It was not far from dawn when Cathy was able, with two other nurses from her floor, to take a few minutes to go down to the dining room for coffee. The tables were well filled, mostly with hospital personnel, but here and there were white-faced family groups, tense with waiting for news of the condition of some loved one.

THE signs are for a rather obstructed or crystallized state of affairs, in which it might be as well to take things as they come and not attempt to force the issues. Postponements, delays and disappointments are in order, with a general let-down, depression or inertia due to overtaxing the energies and pocketbook as well, on holiday activities or extra vagances. Try to relax as much as possible and conserve all forces and resources for the trying period ahead.

Those whose birthday it is may find themselves in a period of slowmoving plans or ambitions, in which limitations, obstructions, stringencies and other implements of defeat and impediment are to be dealt with. This largely by patiently "holding the fort" until the turn of the astral tide gives the "go ahead" signal. A deflated pocketbook, lowered vitality, or a condition of general low spirits, suggest working along lines of least resistance. A vacation cheerful companionship, may foster latent or flagging abilities.

Play Bridge With BARCLAY

ONLY ONE READING

THERE are no two ways to read the situation when your partner wins your opening lead against a suit contract, lays down the ace of another suit and then switches back to your original suit or else the third side suit. He obviously had the singleton ace of the second suit and wants you to return it to him if you get the lead, so he can trump it. The sequence of events stated is one such frequent occurrence, and the only logical reason for it is so clear-cut, that it may almost be considered a definite convention of play. Failure to catch the idea is almost unpardonable.

At one table of a duplicate that contract was beaten just a single trick, though the defense began the same as elsewhere. Every West led the spade 9, the 10 going on from dummy and the J winning. Every East then scored the club A, laid down the spade A and led the spade 6 for West to ruff, setting the contract. One West then made the terrible return of his diamond 2. South won it with dummy's A, took out the defender's trumps, finessed the club 9 and so got the rest of the tricks.

At all other tables, after West ruffed the third spade, he returned a club, as called for by East's play of the singleton A. That resulted in setting the contract two tricks when East trumped it.

The defensive players in this contest were not overly strong, or else someone should have set the contract three tricks. West should have trumped his partner's spade A on the third trick, led a second round club for East to ruff, ruffed the third round spade and then led a third round club for another ruff from East. This play was bound to gain a trick if East had two trumps, and could not lose even if he had just one.

Helen L. Heffner Becomes Bride Of John F. Meyers

Before a candlelighted altar in King Avenue Methodist church, Columbus, on Christmas Eve, Miss Helen Louise Heffner became the bride of John F. Meyers. The double-ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Claude S. Garrison.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Ralph Heffner, Salt Creek township, and her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Meyers of Dayton.

For her wedding, the bride chose a white silk gown fashioned with a sweetheart neckline with trimmings of ruffles and a matching head-dress. Her corsage was a purple orchid.

They were attended by Mr.

and Mrs. Charles Andre, Dayton, brother-in-law and sister of the bridegroom. The new Mrs. Meyers was graduated by Salt Creek township high school and Bustin beauty school, Columbus. She now is associated with a beauty shop in Columbus. Mr. Meyers is a junior in the college of education, Ohio State university.

One-Minute Test
1. What ship was built to meet the threat of the Confederate Merrimac?
2. What was the name of Commodore Perry's flagship at the Battle of Lake Erie?
3. What was the name of the John Paul Jones' ship that fought the Serapis off the English coast, in the North Sea, in 1779?

Words of Wisdom
Justice is the first virtue of those who command, and stops the complaints of those who obey. —Diderot.

Hints on Etiquette
When you pass a woman you know who is seated at a table in a restaurant and you stop to shake hands, the seated one does not rise unless the other is old.

Today's Horoscope
Learn to rely on your own judgment, as it is good and will bring you much success. You are an entertaining person, intelligent, fun-loving, and have marked literary ability. You are also far-sighted, conservative, good company, a strong lover, and you take a deep interest in your home. For the best results today follow along well-established lines, as the prevailing influences are doubtful. Do not be improvident or careless in money matters, especially where friends, particularly women, are concerned during this next 12 months. Avoid the law and making erratic changes. Take and act upon the advice of elders, who will render valuable aid. The child who comes into the world on this day after Christmas will probably gain by legacy and be fortunate in the chosen profession. Loss through extravagance, law and ultra-modern concerns is threatened, however.

Sokolosky's These Days

But our hearts are still hard and we are stiff-necked and consumed with false and bitter pride. And we follow doctrines which are so untrue that they turn the minds of men to wars and torture and spiteful impoverishment of their neighbors. We still dare not be good lest the wicked call it weakness and use our very goodness to destroy us.

He said:
"Yay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth."

Where moth and rust doth corrupt,
And where thieves break through and steal:

But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven.

In this coming year may your treasures be great and glorious. May it be in the goodness of your thought, in kindness and sacrifice for those who are wounded in spirit. May God bless your families, you and your children, by bringing tranquility to your household and upon all the Earth, Peace—the Peace of God.

Italians Name Sub Minister

ROME, Dec. 26—The Italian foreign office announced today that Bartolomeo Migone, counselor of the Italian embassy in London, will succeed Alberto Bellardi Ricci, who was assassinated yesterday, as minister to Sweden.

Ricci, 55, was slain at a combined Christmas and farewell party prior to his departure for Chile where he was to have been Italian ambassador.

His assailant, Giuseppe Capocci, an Italian balloon vendor who had just been released from a mental hospital, thrust a scissors blade into Ricci's heart.

Practice Brings Down Burglar

CLEVELAND, Dec. 26—Nathan R. Stern of Cleveland offers proof today that practice makes perfect.

Stern, manager of the Western Reserve laboratories, captured a would-be burglar in the plant building early yesterday when the man, Frank Bonkowski, 29, tripped off a home-made alarm.

Awakened by the alarm, Stern, who lives in the plant, took a pistol and called on the intruder to surrender. When Bonkowski failed to answer, Stern fired twice in the darkness, hitting the ex-convict twice in the legs.

Stern said he learned about shooting while with the First Division in World War I and kept up his accuracy by practicing in the warehouse of the laboratory.

Ballistics Test To Determine Suspect's Guilt

CLEVELAND, Dec. 26 — Results of a Cleveland ballistics test were expected to throw some light today on the strange case of an East Liverpool man who said he "must have" killed his common-law wife some time early yesterday.

The victim, Mrs. Goldie Adams, 48, mother of two children, was found shot to death in the caretaker's shack on the city dump at East Liverpool.

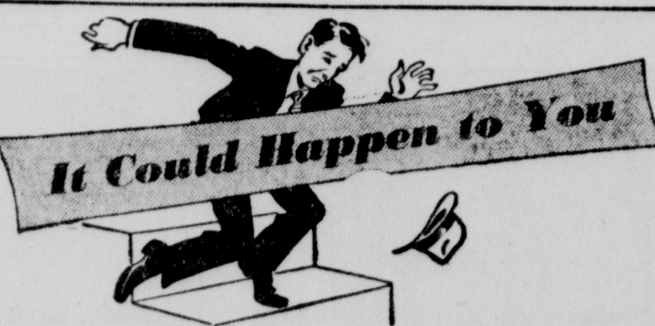

Taken to Cleveland for paraffin tests for powder marks was John Adams, 50, caretaker of the dump.

Columbiana County Sheriff George E. Hayes also reported that Adams declared his probable guilt but that he claimed that he "didn't know what happened."

According to Hayes, Adams, Ross Adams, 49, former husband of the victim and no relation to the suspect, and the woman celebrated Christmas Eve together in the shack. When Adams awoke next morning, he found Mrs. Adams dead of gunshot wounds.

Adams told police the gun he used in the slaying was his own and was hidden under a pillow. He said he was the only one who knew of its hiding place.

Whoopie Squads To Roam City

CLEVELAND, Dec. 26— "Whoopie" squads will patrol Cleveland's streets on New Year's Eve as part of a "tough" program to cut down traffic deaths in 1948.

City Safety Director William F. Smith warned that persons who drink should "either take a cab when going home or let someone else drive the car."

He said some members of the police department's public relations department would tour cocktail lounges to offer "friendly" warnings to those who appear to be celebrating a bit too heavily.

SPEED COUNTS AT Milking Time

Washing with hot water (130°F.) not only promotes sanitation but stimulates the let-down action.

Faster milking, according to dairy tests, helps increase milk production. The gentle, thorough action of McCormick-Deering Milkers helps your cows let down their milk faster—and give more milk. McCormick-Deering Milkers also decrease the amount of strappings and help maintain healthy udders. Take good care of your milker. Ask us for suggestions on keeping it operating efficiently.

Foremilking reduces bacteria count and is a check on the health and condition of the udder. A uniform routine for time and order of milking is important.

Test cups on McCormick-Deering Milkers can be put in place quickly and the cow milked out quickly (3 or 4 minutes). Strip at once after removing the milker unit.

Tojo Denies Guilt For Pacific War

tion of Tojo, who was a general and war minister as well as premier, was based upon "just control and discipline" and bore no responsibility for alleged atrocities.

THE COCKY little would-be Napoleon of the defunct Rising Sun empire volunteered full responsibility for his administrative policies that hurled Nippon into armed hostilities against the Western nations and for the defeat that followed.

He sought, at the same time, to absolve Emperor Hirohito whom he portrayed as a sovereign devoid of all guilt.

Apparently seeking to go down in history as a Japanese leader who refused to cringe before his conquerors and who maintained "face" to the end, Tojo boldly defied the authority of the 11-nation tribunal. He asserted:

"Never at any time did I conceive that waging this war would or could be challenged by the victors as an international crime."

Tojo declared: "The fruitless and devastating war that broke out December 8, 1941, was absolutely provoked by the Allied powers to force America into the European conflict and was an unavoidable war of self-defense insofar as my country was concerned."

He leveled charges of insincerity at America, saying the United States entered prewar Pacific negotiations "for reasons of desperation, like a drowning man grasping at a straw, or for the purpose of gaining time."

Faster milking, according to dairy tests, helps increase milk production. The gentle, thorough action of McCormick-Deering Milkers helps your cows let down their milk faster—and give more milk. McCormick-Deering Milkers also decrease the amount of strappings and help maintain healthy udders. Take good care of your milker. Ask us for suggestions on keeping it operating efficiently.

Washing with hot water (130°F.) not only promotes sanitation but stimulates the let-down action.

Foremilking reduces bacteria count and is a check on the health and condition of the udder. A uniform routine for time and order of milking is important.

Teat cups on McCormick-Deering Milkers can be put in place quickly and the cow milked out quickly (3 or 4 minutes). Strip at once after removing the milker unit.
